

THE RESET PROTOCOL

The Science Beneath the Reset

Why structured burnout recovery requires more than coaching alone, and why the nervous system, the biofield, and the body must be addressed together.

Why most burnout recovery doesn't work.

By the time a high-performing professional admits they're burnt out, they've usually already tried the obvious things. A holiday. A weekend off. A reduction in hours. A new gym routine. A sabbatical. Therapy.

Some of these help briefly. None of them resolve it. Within weeks of returning to normal life, the fog returns, the sleep collapses again, the irritability creeps back, and the conviction settles in that this is just how things are now.

It is not how things are. But it is also not a problem any single approach is going to fix.

Burnout in high functioning professionals is not a rest deficit. It is a multi-system condition involving the nervous system, the body's biochemistry, the bioelectric field around the body, and the structural realities of a life that no longer fits. Address only one layer and the others pull the system back into collapse. Address all four in the right sequence and recovery is not only possible, it is durable.

This is what The Reset Protocol does. The pages that follow explain how, and why.

Four mechanisms, addressed in sequence.

The Reset Protocol works through four distinct, scientifically grounded mechanisms, each addressing a different layer of what burnout actually is.

01 Nervous system regulation

Chronic stress locks the nervous system into either sympathetic activation (the wired, anxious, can't-switch-off state or, in late-stage burnout, dorsal vagal collapse (the foggy, numb, disconnected state. Talk-based coaching cannot reach this layer because language operates downstream of physiology. The Reset Protocol opens with deliberate nervous system stabilisation, co-regulation, breath, hands-near energetic intervention, to bring the client's system back into ventral vagal function, where recovery becomes possible.

02 Biofield coherence

The human body produces a measurable bioelectromagnetic field. Under chronic stress, the rhythms of heart, brain, and breath fall out of coherence with each other. Reiki and structured energetic work, recognised by the NIH as biofield therapies, restore that coherence. Peer-reviewed studies show measurable shifts in cortisol levels, anxiety markers, and heart rate variability after biofield sessions. This is the layer most coaches do not work with, and it is one of the reasons recovery in this protocol is faster and more stable.

03 Somatic intelligence

Long-term stress severs the connection between the mind and the body's signals, what neuroscience calls interoception. People stop noticing they are tired until they collapse, stop noticing they are hungry until they are shaking, stop noticing their boundaries are gone until something breaks. The Reset Protocol systematically rebuilds this internal signal system, so the client can read their own state in real time and respond to it before crisis arrives.

The biochemistry and biophysics of what is happening.

For clients who want to understand what is actually being addressed in their body during recovery, the language below is the technical layer underneath the experience.

ALLOSTATIC LOAD

The cumulative wear-and-tear of chronic stress on the body, measured across cardiovascular, metabolic, immune, and neurological systems. Burnout is not a feeling, it is high allostatic load with measurable biological signatures.

CORTISOL DYSREGULATION

A healthy cortisol curve peaks shortly after waking and declines through the day. Burnt out clients show flattened curves: low morning energy, wired evenings, fragmented sleep. The protocol works to restore the natural rhythm.

HEART RATE VARIABILITY

HRV - the variation between heartbeats, is the gold standard measure of nervous system flexibility. Low HRV correlates strongly with burnout. Rising HRV through recovery is measurable on any modern wearable.

POLYVAGAL REGULATION

Stephen Porges's research shows three distinct nervous system states: ventral vagal (calm, capable), sympathetic (mobilised), and dorsal vagal (shutdown). The protocol works to bring clients reliably back into ventral function.

BIOFIELD RESEARCH

Now an NIH-recognised category. Studies in peer reviewed journals demonstrate measurable effects of biofield interventions on cortisol, pain, anxiety, and immune markers. The science is no longer fringe.

MITOCHONDRIAL FATIGUE

Chronic stress impairs cellular energy production. Burnout exhaustion is not psychological alone, it has a measurable cellular component. Recovery includes restoring the conditions for mitochondrial function.

The four phases of The Reset Protocol.

Every client moves through the same arc, in the same order, at the pace their system needs. State precedes story. Story precedes structure. Structure precedes identity.

PHASE 01 Stabilise

Calm the nervous system. Establish safety. Bring the client out of chronic activation or shutdown and back into the regulated state where any further work is possible. One to two sessions. Most clients sleep through the night for the first time in months within fourteen days.

PHASE 02 Reset

Cut the noise. Surface what is actually happening underneath the presenting problem, almost never what the client arrived believing it was. By the end of this phase the client can see the situation clearly, often for the first time in years. Three sessions.

PHASE 03 Rebuild

Install structure. Boundaries, decisions, removals, surgical, not dramatic. Working through five pillars (body, boundaries, work, people, direction, one action per week. Three to four sessions.

PHASE 04 Reconnect

Realign direction. Install the new identity. Most clients arrive on the other side knowing not just what they no longer tolerate, but who they are now becoming. Two to three sessions, spaced further apart, before graduation.

Twelve sessions in total for most clients. Some need eight. Some need sixteen. The protocol flexes; the sequence does not.

Why this combination is rare.

There are coaches who do executive work. There are Reiki practitioners. There are somatic therapists. There are very few practitioners trained in all three, sequencing the work so the layers reinforce each other rather than compete.

The Reset Protocol is the integration. Coaching gives the structure that energy work alone cannot. Energetic and nervous-system work reach the layers that coaching alone cannot. The somatic dimension keeps the work landed in the body, where lasting change actually occurs.

The result is a recovery process that is faster, deeper, and more durable than any single modality on its own. The clients who experience it describe the same thing in different words: the difference between feeling temporarily better and feeling like themselves again.

Begin where you are.

If anything in these pages described your current state, the next step is a free, confidential, twenty-minute conversation. No pressure, no commitment. Just a clear read on where you are and what would actually help.
